What's in your sack jack? Part one.

The winter's finally kicked in and we've had a decent amount of snow and freezing conditions to make getting high up on moorland trails an inviting prospect again. With another extended cold spell predicted and more snow forecast for the weekend I figured now was a good time to kick off an informal series of features we've had planned on what people carry on rides.

So without further ado, here's what's in my sack...

So first off for extended rides in winter I tend to opt for a slightly bigger backpack than normal and I've found the Camelbak Charge with 11.5 litres of storage to be pretty much the right size for what I want to carry without tempting me to pack too much. The construction is pretty lightweight too which helps given I usually carry more at this time of year.
